

Locker lid on the head!!

View previous topic :: View next topic

Author	Message
mimsy pilchard Joined: 30 Jun 2005 Posts: 7 Location: gosport	Posted: 01 Aug 2005 07:12 am Post subject: Ouch! quote edit ip Ever had a locker lid on the head? After a particularly painful clout, I moved the security bungees on my B36. The way they were set up, you had to hold the lid open with one hand, lean right over the empty locker , squeezing past the wheel to reach the guard rail behind.....difficult in any lumpy sea. The solution: Unscrew and reverse the orientation of the bungee. Now, I can open the locker and, kneeling on the seat, quite easily (and safely) reach the guard rail. Back to top profile pm email

mimsy pilchard Joined: 30 Jun 2005 Posts: 7 Location: gosport	Posted: 10 Aug 2005 09:47 am Post subject: Ouch again! quote edit ip Has anyone developed a method of securing the folding section of worktop that fits over the stove. When you try to cook at sea, the darn thing keeps flopping over and either pushing the kettle off (dangerous) or getting scorched (smelly). We managed for a while with a piece of shock cord but the fittings have broken so now I'm looking for a better solution. Whilst I'm at it, has anyone found a way of securing the fridge door in the open position? If you leave it closed and off for a while, it all smells pretty musty when you come to re-use it. Perhaps one of those springy thingys like they use on the chart table? One thing's for sure.....what looks good at the Boat show can be a darned nuisance at sea. Back to top profile pm email
---	---

Betty Blue Joined: 11 Apr 2005 Posts: 4 Location: Mayflower Marina, Plymouth.	Posted: 22 Aug 2005 04:44 pm Post subject: quote edit ip 😊 I have a solution to the folding cooker lid that you mention!! We bought our B36 7 months ago and it was the first job I did on board as I noticed the burn marks left by the previous owner, I used a brass cabin hook attached to the vertical bit behind and the hasp type bit attached to the underside of the lid. If you want a photo, let me know I'll get one next time I'm on board! Steve. Back to top profile pm email
---	--

mamalu Joined: 26 Aug 2005 Posts: 1 Location: JORDAN	Posted: 28 Aug 2005 09:21 am Post subject: folding stove lid quote edit ip Hi, We purchased a 2000 model Bavaria 42 last year and it already had a short piece of webbing that was attached with push button stainless clips (similar to what is used with upholstery 😊) it works really well. I am not sure if this was installed by the owner or bavaria. I also could send a pic if you need.
--	--

Bye
Steve and Tracy Grace
SV MAMALU

Back to top

